<p class="the age of the child is important. If the child is an adult"" by state law with regard to counseling (states differ on this range) no one is allowed to be in the session. Ethical and legal standards generally require that a counselor follow both, but not both. This means that a counselor should not generally provide both counseling and offer an opinion regarding who should have custody. Knowing the details of any parenting plan or separation agreement is important. Generally, either parent can consent to counseling for a minor child and can be present during the child's sessions. If a parenting plan or separation agreement specifies that one of the parents can consent to counseling for the minor child and only that parent can be present during the child's sessions.
In a situation like this I would strongly recommend seeking out legal advice specific to your state law.
